Michigan: A Great Place To Do Business

By Lynne R. Zacharias

January/February 2009

For the second year running, Corp! magazine asked its readers to name the “Best of the Best Michigan Business,” and our offices were inundated with nominations. Our savvy readers know a good business when they see it and they welcomed the opportunity to voice their opinions. We encourage you to read through the profiles of our winners and learn why they are all proud to be doing business in Michigan.

Andrew V. Farbman, president and CEO, believes everything a business owner could want is in Michigan:

“From an educated workforce to beautiful architecture and access to cutting edge technology, Michigan has limitless potential.” Founded in 1976 by Burton Farbman and Lee Stein, the company sought to create one of the region’s first full-service real estate firms that offered all of the services their clients could possibly need. The company attributes its success to employees’ resourcefulness and innovation to each and every project and challenge they encounter.
